

3.5 Procedures at the customs office of exit.

The customs office of exit is the office to which goods must be presented before they leave the customs territory of the Union and at which they will be subject to exit formalities and appropriate risk-based controls. These controls focus in particular on whether goods are

- (a) Missing
- (b) In excess
- (c) Do not correspond to those declared or have been substituted.

Where no discrepancies are identified, the customs office of exit releases the goods for exit. Where it is established that goods are missing, the customs office of exit should inform the office of export. The trader at exit can use the arrival at exit message (IE507) to notify Customs of any discrepancies. In a case where the office of exit establishes that there are goods in excess, the customs officer should refuse exit of these excess goods until an additional export declaration has been lodged.

When the office of exit establishes a discrepancy in the nature of the goods, the customs officer should refuse exit of these goods and take the following actions:

- (a) If goods are missing, inform the office of export and release the goods for exit.
- (b) If goods are in excess, release only the goods for exit which have been declared for export. For the other goods a new export declaration is required which may, as an exception, be lodged to the office of exit
- (c) If the nature of the goods is different from those declared (for example, shoes instead of t-shirts) the original export declaration must be invalidated and a new one lodged. The new declaration may be lodged at the office of exit.

3.6 Obligation to provide the necessary information at the customs office of exit

The person holding the goods is required to advise the next holder of the goods of the MRN(s) of the export declaration(s) together with the unique consignment reference number or transport document number and number of packages. If containerised, the equipment identification number should also be given. This must be done as early as possible – at the latest at the handover of the goods. The advice may be made using commercial, port or transport information systems and processes or, where not available, in any other form. At the latest upon handover of the goods, the person to whom they are handed over must record the advice provided by the first holder of the goods. Further information on the roles and responsibilities in the supply chain is available on the Revenue website.

If the carrier at exit cannot confirm the arrival at exit message (IE507) is lodged, it may not load the goods or bring them out of the Union.

The carrier at exit must then inform the office of exit that the goods have effectively left the Union, by submitting the exit notification message (IE590) and can be made available to customs through existing commercial, port or transport systems.
